Tiager, you gotta do better than this, or else you will fall behind the class.

I still can't write very well, but now
I can draw and create designs as my job,
all the while listening to my favorite music.

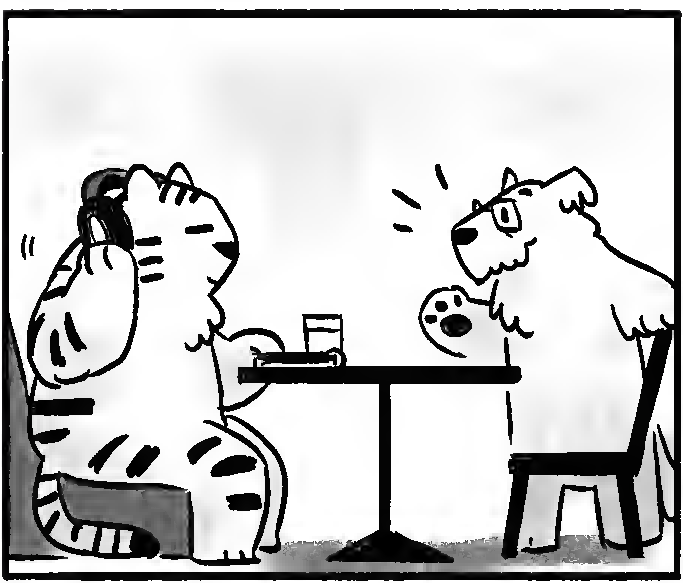
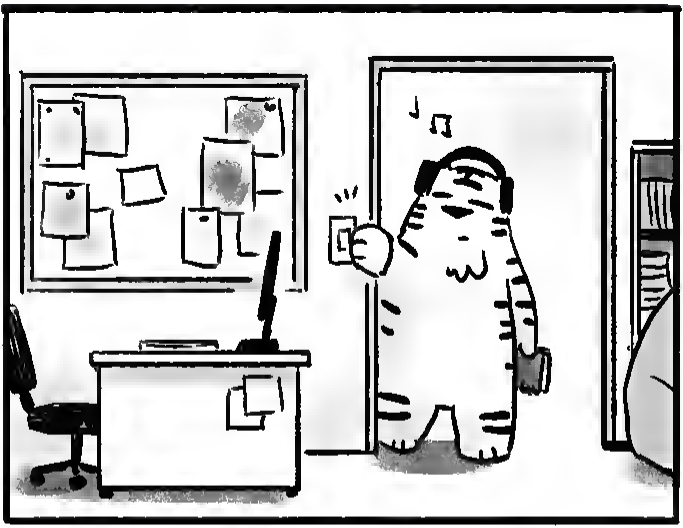
Today afterschool we played basketball.
went to the park

They were my best subjects.

But I wasn't good at reading music scores,
so I turned to focus on art.

Although I did not become a famous artist,
I always remember what my teacher said
and treat him for a meal...





It's the best job I can ask for.

My English teacher once told me...

"One day when you become a famous artist,
remember to treat me for a meal!"

I drew everywhere, on sketchbooks, worksheets, notes, and exercise books.

I had fun illustrating the things I write about, and gained confidence in finding something I'm good at.

They are really good!
I actually enjoy looking at your drawings more than reading other students' writings.

You are talented in art. Keep doing it!

I would like to dedicate this episode to my art teachers and especially my secondary school English teacher, who loved the animal doodles in my exercise book and encouraged me to keep drawing.
A little does go a long way! =)

His kind words went a long way and encouraged me to keep drawing.

I took more art classes and went to study art in college.

My school days were quite troublesome.

I had no problem in reading and speaking,
but I could not write well.

...That was what I remembered the most from my school days.

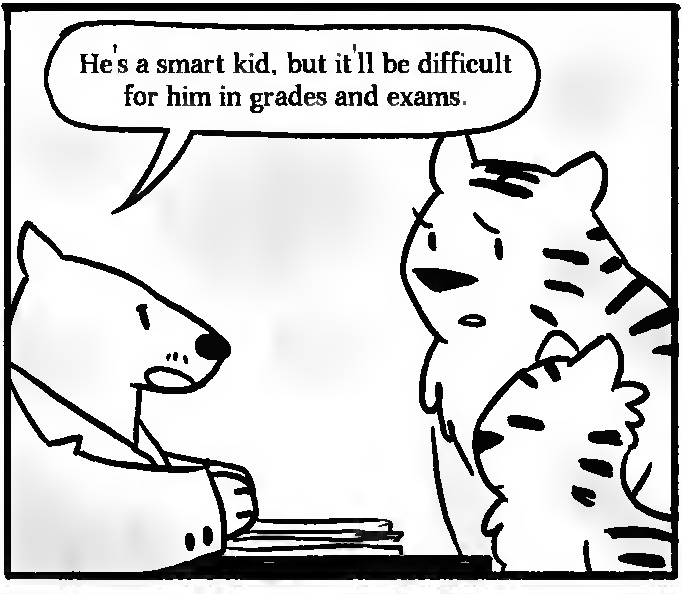
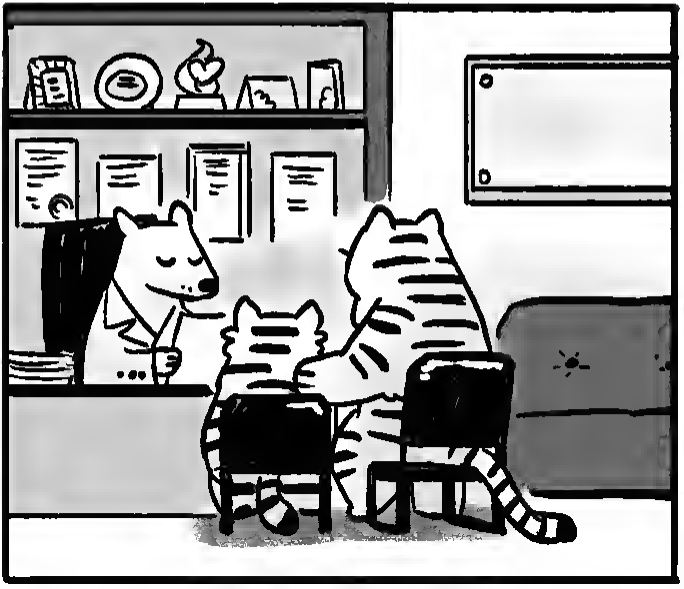
...Thank you for your encouragement.



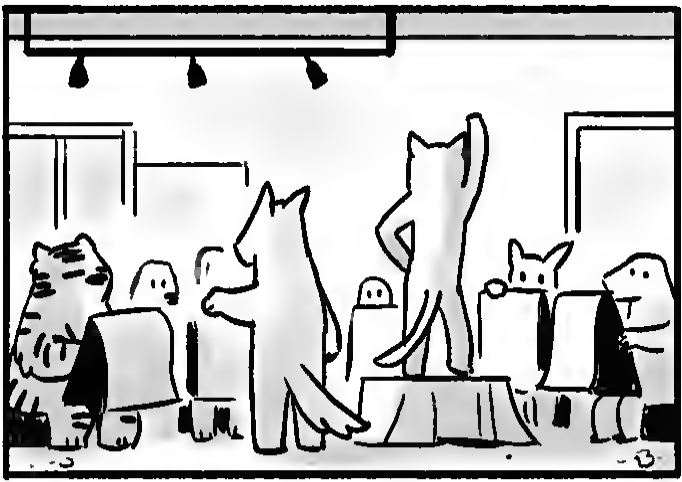
Most of my teachers and classmates did not know much about my problem so they just thought I'm dumb.

The doctor said I have dyslexia.

I didn't know what it means, I just know it's something about a reading-writing disorder.



One day, my English teacher called me out when he finished correcting our homework.



ART SCHOOL

Since I had difficulty in writing,
my favorite subjects were music and art
because I don't need to use words to express myself.

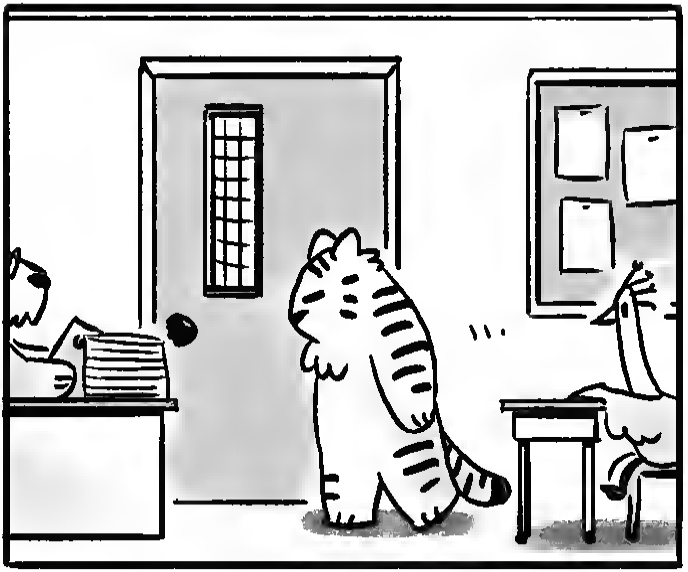
A Little Goes A Long Way

I was afraid he is going to scold me for drawing in my exercise book.



They told me I will never get a proper job because I can't write well.

Sometimes it's pretty discouraging when you want to be better but you just can't.

Tiager, did you draw these?
